partment, said that the regulator's priority in the first few months will be ease of doing business. "Trust and common sense will be applied and we won't go just by the letter of the law," he addressed the gathering of nearly 100 people at the regional seminar on 'IMO Sulphur Cap 2020 - Implementation and its Impact in Indian Waters', conducted in Chennai.

Technical compatibility

The sulphur cap has thrown the shipping world into heightened activity with oil companies and refiners across the world upgrading their infrastructure to supply low sulphur fuels in adequate quantities to ships to avoid disruptions in ship movement. There have, however, been fears over the technical compatibility of the new fuels with shipboard them continue to use higher sulphur fuel but would cost millions of dollars in capital expenditure. There are concerns over how effectively these devices would operate and what would be the impact of acidic corrosion on device systems and pipelines caused by the sulphurous washwater.

Anil Vasu, Chief Technical Service manager of Indian Oil Corporation Ltd, said that the total bunker fuel requirement in India is around 1.7 million tonnes per year, largely supplied by State-owned companies. Out of this, some 0.965 mtpa is high sulphur furnace oil, while the rest is distillate fuel. "The IOC's refinery in Koyali alone has built enough capacity in the last one year to supply 1.0 mtpa," he said. All the ports in the west coast have already stocked this fuel.

ant fuel product is also a straight-run residual. Of the company's two refineries, the one in Vizag can now produce 5,000-10,000 tonnes per month to begin with. Infrastructure will be upgraded soon to cater to the demand, he said.

IMO mandate

Some countries have sought to exempt coastal ships from the IMO mandate. Vikranth Rai, deputy director general of shipping, said that Indian coastal ships will not be exempted from the mandate, although the regulator will not insist on cleaning of storage tanks that are now carrying higher sulphur fuel.

He said nearly 80 per cent of the 950 coastal ships in India already use low sulphur fuel. Some 20 are under oil companies' charter, which means they can readily get compliant fuel, he added.

End-user spending

Cloud application services (SaaS) is the segment where end-user firms in India will spend the most and represents 42 per cent of overall public cloud services end-user spending in 2020. End-user spending on SaaS cloud application services in India will total $1.4 billion in 2020, an increase of over 21 per cent year-over-year.

"Organisations are moving their legacy applications to SaaS because it provides them with the flexibility of subscription-based consumption, in contrast to expensive licence-based on-premises consumption models," said Nag. He said, "SaaS adoption is associated with a lower cost of entry, which is one of the reasons for the high investment in this segment in India, a price-sensitive market."

The next wave of changes that India's CIOs foresee is consolidation in the cloud services market.
