Russian President Vladimir Putin, along with top government officials, oversees the test launch of the Avangard hypersonic glide vehicle from the Defense Ministry's control room in Moscow, Russia, on Wednesday AP

Moscow, December 26

Russian President Vladimir Putin said on Wednesday that Russia will deploy its first regiment of hypersonic nuclear-capable missiles next year, and said that the move implies the country now had a new type of strategic weapon.

Putin was speaking after overseeing, what the Kremlin said was, a pre-deployment test of the new missile system called Avangard.

"This test, which has just finished, ended with complete success," Putin said at a government meeting.

"From next year, Russia's armed forces will get the new intercontinental strategic system Avangard ... It's a big moment in the life of the armed forces and in the country. Russia has obtained a new type of strategic weapon."

Russia said the new missile system, one of several new weapons that Putin announced in March, is highly manoeuvrable, to easily evade missile defence systems.

Putin remotely observed Wednesday's test from a Russian defence ministry building in Moscow. The Kremlin described the test in a statement, that an Avangard missile, launched from a location in southwest Russia, had successfully hit and destroyed a target in the Russian Far East.

Putin announced an array of new weapons in March, including the Avangard, in one of his most bellicose speeches in years, and said that they could hit almost any point in the world and evade a US-built missile shield.
